disconnections of the status of Gen. Robert E. Lee in the national Capitol. Asked to express his views for publication. Judge Torrance said:

"A civil war must end, and I prefer to believe that ours ended 45 years ago when Grant and Lee sheathed their swords at Appomattox. 'Theterms of he surrender imposed no penalties upon the living, nor did they call for any discrediting of the memory of the dead. The war being over, the first duty of every patriot, north and south, was to of the strife, to 'bind up the nation's wounds,' and to mutally treas ure the heroism and self-sacrifice of the American soldier. Gen. Lee was one of the foremost in this patriotic duty, and history will accord him high praise for his sincere and unqualified acceptance of the results of the war. The chief objection urged against his statue is the uniform, but to clothe it in blue would be ridiculous. As history will class him among the great generals of his age, seems altogether becoming that he should appear in a military uniform. If not the blue, why then it must be the gray. Is it not strange that opposition should be directed against placing his statue in the hall of fame and no protest made to the appointment of the two former Confederate soldiers to the Supreme bench of the United States? It is the duty of these two justices to construe the constitution and laws of the land in cases affecting the welfare of all the people, If the decisions of these two former Confederates on the highest court in the land are accepted as patriotic, wise, and just, what possible harm can come to the republic by placing in the national Capitol the bronze statue of Gen. Lee?"—[Newport, R. I., Her-
